

Understanding and Practising OTL™ Leadership

A two day workshop

Learn how to tackle and progress tough issues whilst building trustful relationships.

Many leaders find it difficult to build relationships while tackling and progressing significant work tasks and problems. Open-to-learning™ (OTL™) Leadership is unique in explicitly addressing the integration of task and relationships so that respect is maintained while difficult issues are progressed.

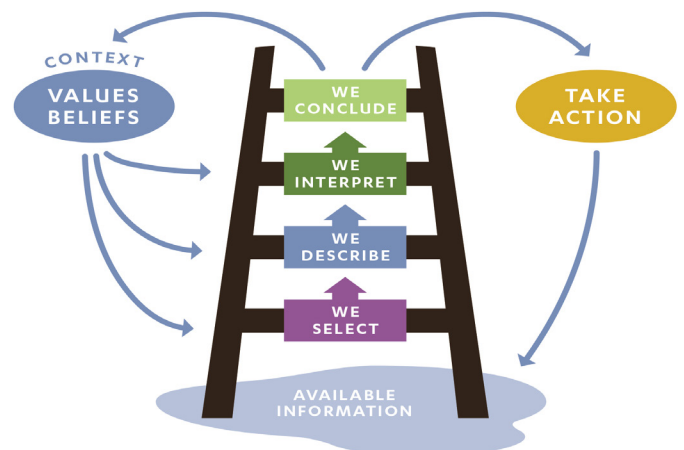

The Understanding and Practising OTL™ Leadership two day workshop provides:

- Coaching and extensive feedback from experienced and accredited facilitators on participants' personal leadership style.
- Problem solving contextualised to each participant's role and organisation.
- High quality course materials that include templates, cue cards, selected readings and workbooks.
- Research-based professional development with direct relevance to participants' own leadership and school development.
- Considerable time for practising OTL™ conversations.
- Expert critique of participants' conversations.
- A deepened understanding of the values that underpin OTL™.

Participant Feedback

"This has been fantastic and very practical. Great having the opportunity to 'play' with our own scenarios and record and work with a buddy - thank you so much."

"The notion of OTL™ was new to me, the basis of respect, validity and commitment makes total sense and sits naturally with our values."

Course designed and written by DISTINGUISHED PROFESSOR VIVIANE ROBINSON and JACQUI PATUAWA alongside a team of skilled and passionate educators from the University of Auckland. We now have a group of trained facilitators who deliver this workshop across New Zealand. This workshop will build your capability to resolve your current work based issues.
